DAY 3

“When you know what you want, and want it bad enough, you will find a way to get it” - Jim Rohn

Let's talk a little bit about assumptions. Let's say you got out of a place –just because you were bored and wanted a little change- that took days to arrive, and the journey was quite difficult. To get there, you have to travel for days, climb steep cliffs, pass through wild animals.

I'll tell you what will happen, half the way you will look for ways to get back

Is it worth any of these because you just wanted to make a small change? What if we told you that someone you love very much is stuck in the same place and needs your help? I'm sure you will do your best to get there with all your might.

What do you think has changed in this scenario?

Yes, the only thing that has changed is the reason you got to get there.

Take a look around you, the success stories you've heard so far. People who do great things have all the same great reasons to motivate them and keep them from going back from their way. If you want to achieve a goal, you also need strong reasons. If you don't have enough strong reasons to succeed, you will ask yourself "Why was I on this road?" when you get halfway down the road. Because if you want to achieve something, you will work for it, compromise yourself and your time; if you don't have a enough strong reason, after a while you'll think it's not worth all the effort and time spent. So today I want you to ask yourself the magical question for your goals:

"Why do I want this?"

Throughout your journey, you'll need at least three powerful reasons for each of your goals. Those reasons will get you out of your bed every day, destroy all the excuses that the ego will generate in order not to act, all the sentences that start with "This job is not possible for me because..." will turn into the "How is it possible?"

Those reasons will make your heart beat with excitement even when it comes to your mind. It will make you want to act as soon as possible. Three reasons each will spark the fire burning inside you and excite you...

Come on, all your fantastic goals are waiting for you on your study agenda to work on!

Tasks:

- Find three strong reasons for each of your goals and write them down on your study agenda.
